

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved our time at home. We used to receive a constant stream of calls at our home from all types of sales organizations and charities. It was so bad that we quit answering the telephone and used call screening on our answering machine or caller id to identify people and before we would answer. We now rarely receive any type of solicitation call. When we do we immediately ask to be put on their do not call list.

The Indiana law has taken care of our needs and I wish the FCC would let the Indiana authorities continue to do their job without interference from the FCC. The problem has been solved.
